To Address Gathering At A
Baseball Park In Hazleton

TELLS OF HIS PLANS

Ruth Committee To Ignore
Wilson's Bitter
Criticism

PHILA., July 28—(INS)—The Ruth Legislative Committee investigating the Pennsylvania courts, today decided to ignore for the present at least, Mayor S. Davis Wilson's bitter criticism of the committee because of the arrest of a State trooper on charges of wire tapping.

The committee, after a meeting in a secret session here believed the tapping of telephone wires leading to the home of Louis Wilgard, Wilson's secretary, a "closed incident," while State Senator Frank W. Ruth, of Berks County, chairman, announced the committee has obtained "all the information it needs."

Meanwhile, the Mayor prepared to leave here for Hazleton, where he will open his campaign for the Governorship by addressing a gathering at a baseball park. Although the trip was arranged by various Hazleton organizers before the Mayor announced his candidacy for the Governorship, he said:

"I have got to start my campaign some time. It may as well be now."

500 Killed As Battle Rages

Tokyo, July 28—Major fighting in which 500 Chinese troops were killed, raged in north China today as Japanese forces unleashed their present campaign to blast Chinese forces from the whole area.

Japanese troops shelled Nanyuan, south of Peiping, and then went into Hsingkung, still farther south. When the Chinese retreated from Hsingkung, they left five hundred dead on the field of battle, authorities here asserted. Japanese troops also "suffered heavily," it was stated, but no exact announcement of casualties was made.

War office authorities stated Japanese airplanes which bombarded the Chinese 29th army headquarters for two hours had heavy casualties, and caused "terrible damage."

While assurances were given of every effort to protect American lives and property in the Peiping area, the Japanese government ordered Japanese Nationals to evacuate Swatow, Amoy and Foochow, in southern China.

CRUELTY TO MONKEY

ST. LOUIS—(INS)—Despite his denial of the charge, John Delotta, a local organ grinder, was recently fined $25 and costs by City Judge Ruddy on the allegation that he had been cruel to his monkey—"Fanny."

Delotta admitted that he pushed the animal in order to "teach it some sense" because "Fanny" wasn't picking up money fast enough. The defendant told the court he was very fond of the monkey and treated it kindly.

WARNS POTATO GROWERS TO CONTROL THE BLIGHT

President of State Association
Says Blight Can Cause Damage

CROP APPEARS GOOD

Although conditions for potatoes throughout the State in general this season have been very favorable, it has been announced by Walter S. Bishop, of near Doylestown, president of the Pennsylvania Co-operative Potato Growers' Association, that farmers will have to take the proper precaution in order to combat the blight, and this will be by frequent and thorough spraying of the vines.

Commenting on the very heavy rain in the central and lower parts of Bucks county last Friday evening, Mr. Bishop said the rain had been very beneficial to the potatoes, both the early and late varieties.

Because of the excellent growing conditions, said Mr. Bishop, the vines this Summer have become very succulent, but at the same time they have become very susceptible to the blight and regular spraying has become necessary in order to protect the foliage from the blight.

Spraying of the vines by a Bordeaux mixture, said Mr. Bishop, is no cure for the blight, it being only a preventative.

Potato growers, said Mr. Bishop, have been told that if there are four inches of rainfall in July, this is a very good indication of a late blight. "This," he said, "I have found to be true, and wet weather and cool nights are very favorable for the blight."

The late potato crop has not as yet been made, said Mr. Bishop, and the outcome of this depends entirely upon the care the foliage will receive and how much the blight may be kept to a minimum.

In general the prospects for a good potato crop throughout the State are very good. Prospects for the Green Mountain variety, said Mr. Bishop, are especially bright, but as yet it is impossible to estimate the yield per acre. Even though the early varieties of potatoes are about ready to be dug, the blight may cause some damage among them. Mr. Bishop explained that a rain followed by very hot weather for a few days will break down the vines and the blight will not only affect the vines, but it will follow them to the roots and cause the tubers to be damaged.

Mr. Bishop recommended that the spraying with the Bordeaux mixture be done every five or ten days, and if this is followed, there is very little likelihood that the vines will be badly damaged by the blight.

Digging of the Coblens will take place in a few weeks and the Green Mountains will be harvested the latter part of August. The Russets will be harvested later in the season.

Mr. Bishop stated this week that the potato acreage in Bucks county this year is much smaller than usual, this being due, he said, to the fact that many farmers, especially in the lower part of the county, are using their ground for the growing of tomatoes to be shipped later in the season to the canneries.

CROYDON AND ANDALUSIA SCOUTS ARE IN CAMP

Jesse Wendkos Is Named By Third Week Staff As Buccoo Commissioner

FINE AID IS GIVEN

Croydon and Andalusia troops arrived at Buccoo Camps, Saturday. As they checked in, the two Scout troops from the St. Francis Industrial School, Eddington, and Bristol Troop No. 7 "checked out" for home. Croydon and Andalusia will occupy sites that they have camped at previous years at Buccoo. The waterfront has been the most appealing location for Andalusia, and they are looking forward to a full week of activity under their Scoutmaster, George Bloch, assisted by Junior Assistant Scoutmaster Howard Pickersgill. Camping with them will be Field Commissioner of Advancement Jesse Wendkos.

Jesse Wendkos was selected by the third week camp staff to be their Buccoo Commissioner. This is the second year for Mr. Wendkos to be given this honor of being selected by his fellow staff mates. He will be administrative assistant to Scout Executive "Uncle Bill" Livermore. Part of his responsibilities will include the health and sanitation, dress parade formations, and Scouting advancement. Much of Commissioner Wendkos' popularity has been his sincerity, and willingness to do anything he could to help a fellow camper.

Croydon will live at the site known as "The Handicrafters," a part of the Doylestown Kiwanis Club Crafts Lodge. Leading them for the first two days will be Troop Committee Chairman John Welsh. Assistant Scoutmaster Allen Lebo, of Bristol Troop No. 1, has arranged to be at Buccoo to be in charge of the Croydon Scouts the latter part of the week. The troop was assisted in their camping plans by the Women's Auxiliary planning the menus and purchasing the food, led by their president, Mrs. Robert Smith, ably assisted by Mrs. Wolf. Mrs. Bertha Snyder was of considerable help in providing transportation, supplemented by the men of the committee, Messrs. Wainman, Smith and Welsh. A special committee of the Auxiliary accompanied the Scouts to Buccoo. Mrs. William Wainman, Mrs. Robert Smith and Mrs. Bertha Snyder checked up on the menu with the scout chefs, and supervised the storage.

Neighborhood Commissioner Harry E. Oliver repeated his many services to Andalusia Scouting by helping the Scout Troop go to Buccoo through the use of his truck. Riding with him to assist the troop in getting settled was Cubmaster Joseph Kish. Mrs. Parr kindly loaned an ice box to take to camp. The "Famous Auxiliary of Andalusia," a group of devoted mothers and other women willing to help boys in Scouting, gave their usual assistance. Mrs. George Bloch cooked a 10-lb ham, and made a tasty meat loaf. A delicious bowl of home-made salad came from Mrs. Pickersgill, and Mrs. Harry Oliver sent "plenty" of her tasty rice pudding.

Scouts from St. Francis School made good progress in advancement, and report a very happy time from their week at Camp Lookout. Scoutmaster Harry Behm with the help of Thomas Collier and George Muth arranged for the participation of the two troops in the weekly program. The stunts on "show night" were good. They pre-

Take Seriously Story of Location of Liberty Bonds

CHICAGO, July 28—(INS)—Officials today began to take seriously Joe Nelson's story that he has located $135,000 in Liberty Bonds in a hole beneath a tree somewhere near Ruby, Ariz.

This was because Nelson, 29 years old, repeated his story before the lie detector at the Northwestern University Crime Detection Laboratory, and the device said he was telling the truth.

As a result, Lieut. Edward Kelly of the detective bureau said he would ask the Department of Justice to send an officer with Nelson to dig up the bonds.

Nelson was taken into custody when he told Lieut. Kelly he had come here to inquire of an attorney whether the bonds were his or if he had to surrender them to the State of Arizona.

SEE ANOTHER RIFT FOR WHITE HOUSE, SENATE

President Asks Cummings To Rule On Filing of Supreme Court Vacancy

A QUESTION OF WHEN

By George Durno
U. S. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 28—(INS)—Another rift between the White House and the Senate seemed imminent today in the light of President Roosevelt's announcement he had asked Attorney General Cummings to rule whether the Supreme Court vacancy must be filled before Congress adjourns.

It appeared the President was considering shattering another precedent by withholding the name of his first appointee to the high bench until the Senate, which must confirm, has gone home. At his press conference, the executive rendered a curbstone opinion of his own that a recess appointment to the Supreme Court would be just as valid as a recess appointment to an administrative position.

Constitutional lawyers—including some of his supporters—who sit in the Senate differ emphatically.

The Senate legal minds maintain that a President may make a recess appointment to the Supreme Court only when the vacancy occurs during adjournment of Congress. They say the Constitution so holds, and that when a vacancy develops while the Senate is sitting, a new nomination must be made before the final gavel of that particular session falls.

REPORT REAL ESTATE VERY ACTIVE IN BRISTOL

Demand For Apartments Is Greater Than the Supply,
Say Agents

FEW HOUSES FOR RENT

Real estate is moving briskly, according to reports emanating from real estate offices in Bristol borough.

A substantial increase in sale of houses over such business of one year ago is marked; as well as increases in rentals of houses and apartments. In fact, local real estate agents state that apartments are at a premium, and some local offices have no apartments on their lists at the present time.

"We have sold more houses in the last four months than in the past four years," was the statement made by a representative of the office of Howard I. James and Horace N. Davis, today.

Then from the office of Charles LaPolla, another real estate agent, comes the word, "Real estate business is 100 per cent better now than it was one year ago."

"People seem to be better able to finance properties today," is the statement from the office of Hugh B. Eastburn.

"Cash is looser." "Rents are collected more easily." "People have more money for their down payments when buying a home." These are some of the statements made by agents today regarding movements of real estate.

On their list of "Houses for rent," the Messrs. James and Davis now have but two listings, although this office reports several homes for sale. "We have been able to sell more houses in the last four months than during the past four years," said a representative of this firm today. "Those desiring to buy houses are seeking those with from four to six rooms. The small house, with conveniences, is what is wanted by families today. We find a decided shortage in apartments. Every week we have requests for two-room and three-room apartments, but they are not to be had here."

Regarding finances, Horace N. Davis states that although rents have increased at an average of $3 per house in the past year, families seem better able to pay for such. "And families are better equipped to make down payments on homes they want to buy. Some pay 50 per cent cash, and a large number enter building and loan societies in order to pay the balance. We are also making more loans for home-buying than we did a year ago." This firm reports fewer delinquencies in rents, also. Houses sought for rent in Bristol Township are fewer also than the families seeking such.

Hugh B. Eastburn reports "practically no vacancies." Real estate is selling well, he says, and there is quite a demand for four- and five-room houses, both to rent and to buy. "We have rented many houses during the past year, and business has picked up considerably. Money seems 'looser' and people are better able to finance their homes."

FAMILY CASH

Forty-one per cent of the wealth of the United States is in the hands of women, financial statisticians estimate. This includes real estate, stocks, bonds and cash in bank. That places womanhood as an important "prospect" for the banks and investment brokers.

Theoretically, then, 59 per cent of the wealth is owned by men. Theoretically is used advisedly, for if pay checks issued to husbands and bank accounts in their names were credited to the wives who really control them, the percentages would be reversed.

Poor man! He is in a sorer condition than the figures indicate, disconcerting though they are. How far off is the time when husbands will be arguing indignantly with their wives for a generous allowance, instead of doling money out to their wives in grudging spirit.

Uxorial reaction to this possibility is that it would serve the "old tightwad" good. The housewife's chronic complaint is that man will never learn that it takes more than cigar money to operate the house.

No doubt modern conditions have created new causes for domestic strife and divorces, but the good old reliable home-wrecker is the inadequate domestic budget and the "provider" who demands choice cuts on pin money.

LAUGH!

When the laugh is on you, laugh with the rest or some passing student of science will put you down as being of no intelligence; that is if he belongs to the same school of thought as Professor Gaum, of Rutgers College.

According to this school, the ability to laugh at oneself is proof of intelligence. Not all who laugh at themselves are intelligent, mark you, but none who can't are.

Here is a test which pretty definitely fixes the mental caliber of the politicians. No politician can laugh at himself, although all, when they do not have the taxpayers gnashing their teeth, have the populace doubled up with laughter. There is nothing so funny as a man possessed of an exaggerated sense of his own importance, infallibility and indispensability.

It is the intelligent thing to laugh if you slip on a banana peel or push your eye into a door and survive, unless perchance your friends can get a good laugh out of your embarrassment and agony. Of course, slipping on a banana peel and running into doors are not very intelligent things to do.

Ma Perkins concludes that perhaps sitdowns are illegal, and Mae West that maybe she was wed. Thus, here and there, the obvious wins a long fight for recognition.

The English are funny. They look up to a man because of his birth when he hasn't a single million to his name.

You don't pay taxes on your "net" income. Your net income is the little dab the Government leaves you.

Maybe the world is becoming more peaceful. It now takes three incidents to make a crisis.

A "dash" around the world by plane can string out as long as a national "emergency."

It's hard to say if Spain is still a country or just the intersection where the collision took place.

SYNOPSIS

Minnie Fogarty, a product of New York's gas house district is orphaned at the age of 13. The Children's Society comes for her and Minnie escapes down the fire-escape. She seeks refuge with old Pop Dolan, genial brewery watchman. Ensnared in the comfortable office of the idle brewery, which Pop calls her "bood-war," Min—or the "Princess of Pilsen" as the old man affectionately nicknamed her—is happier than she has ever been. Min turns over to Pop for safe-keeping the few possessions her mother left her—a prayer book, brooch, ninety-three dollars and a ticket in the Calcutta Sweepstakes. The old watchman makes a comfortable living operating a still as a side-line.

CHAPTER III

The evening shadows deepened and it was time for Pop to make his final visit to the subcellar. Min hurried to the little room of cooking, conference and conversation and got his lantern. A light was never used in the "library" or the "palace room" because of the many inquisitive eyes in the grim buildings across the little stretch of water. Over there were law officers, appointed to care for the wayward and the abjectly poor, chiefly because they were able to turn in votes on election day; some of those officers being more venal than the worst of their charges. If occasion were given to bring the thought to one of these that any money was being made illicitly in the ancient brewery, it would not be long before the man with that thought would attempt to "muscle in" on Pop. Hence the taboo on lights in this brewery "library."

"I'll take Terry for a little walk," said Min, eager to get a glimpse of shop windows and street crowds again.

"Better slip him in leash, Your Highness," Pop advised. "You're tall for your age and none of these slick young scamps will bother you as long as the dog is close to your heels. Don't stay long. And, another thing, if you run into anybody you know, don't tell them anything. Words cause all the trouble in life. Your Highness. Silence is safe always."

Beyond the block in which she had lived Minnie did not know anyone in all the huge city. The night was pleasant with the first caress of Spring. After the long and bitter months of Winter the tenements disgorged humanity, young and old, celebrating with joyous shouts and dancing, even as in Pagan times, the coming of the joyful season. Hurdy gurdies were grinding, and shrill young voices, breaking from the straight-jackets of school recitations, were lifted high in sidewalk songs.

Well fed and more than content with her new life, Minnie's young heart was bursting with gratitude for the good fortune that had befallen her in her casual adoption by the once lonely old night watchman. Joyous Minnie felt as though she were as high above the average tenement house kid of the gas house district as was the richest of the grand dames high up in Sutton Place above a charwoman.

Min went as far as Third Avenue where in a little shop she bought a pretty silk bow for Terry's collar and one for herself, both a lovely shade of blue. It made the one-eyed, battle-scarred bulldog look silly but Terry didn't know it. Minnie's bow, tucked at the base of her slender and lovely throat, was the color of her fathomless Killarney eyes, and added so much to her beauty that the shopwoman insisted on tying Min's mass of sable hair with a bit of the same color, a gift.

"Now, I'll say, Honey," she declared, "you're the most beautiful kid I ever laid eyes on. Whose little girl are you? But you're not such a little girl at that."

"I'm Pop's little girl," said Minnie, using a babyish tone of voice.

The woman wanted to satisfy her curiosity, but Minnie became afraid and hurried out, starting back to what was her new home. At the foot of her street she was alarmed to behold a gathering of people about the gate in the brewery wall. Terry, too, realized that something had gone wrong and dragged her with his mighty strength into the chattering mob of men and women.

"What's the matter?" she demanded.

"You Minnie Fogarty?" came from a dozen male voices and then the world seemed to come to an end. A series of explosions and blinding sheets of light made Terry sink to the ground and howl, and Min all but fall to the sidewalk.

The door in the wall opened and imprecations poured from Pop.

"Here, Minnie!" he shouted, "Get away from here, the last blasted lot of ye or I'll set this dog on ye!"

The clatter of large flat feet sounded up the street and Officer Cassidy, a mountain of blue, charged the besiegers, waving his club wildly but letting it land lightly upon the legs of newspaper photographers.

Within the walls of her castle the "Princess of Pilsen" and her bewilderment four-legged guard, were dragged to the conference room.

"Oh Lord, Minnie!" gasped Pop. "Oh Lord!"

"What's the matter?" she begged, putting her arms on his great shoulders as he lowered himself to his chair.

"Highness," he said solemnly, "I got so interested in the History of Ancient Rome that I neglected to look at a newspaper for the past week."

"Is it bad news now?" she asked, wiping the sweat of excitement and worry from his forehead.

"The worst possible, Min, the worst possible! You've won the first prize in the sweepstakes. The news-floor... The emergency reel of hose was unwound, a rusty window forced, the water turned on and, amidst a volley of invective, Pop sprayed the enemy. A multitude of children yelled in delight, their elders jeering, the newspaper gang swearing, and the cops calling, "Pop! Pop! Pop!" in protests broken with laughter.

The stampede and the outcries brought more people, while Dame Rumor—that fluttery old lady who never takes a day off at her practical and sometimes vicious jokes—spread the news that there was a battle to the death between gunmen and cops in the old brewery. Tipsters kept newspaper phones busy.

"Machine guns and sawed-off shotguns!" (O, magically arresting words for the front pages!)—"being used from brewery windows!" Thus in rumor did Pop's drops of water solidify into showers of lead and steel.

"Riot call to police headquarters." (That can't be beat for a headline when condensed to—Cops

"The worst possible news, Min," said Pop. "You've won the first prize in the sweepstakes. The newspapers traced you here."

papers traced you here. The name of Minnie Fogarty will be on the lips of everybody in the civilized world in the morning! We are ruined... ruined... ruined."

Minnie didn't know what to say or do, so she removed the blue ribbon from Terry's collar, smoothed it out and wrapped it up for their next street journey. Then she had Terry "say his prayers" as usual in his corner before curling up.

"They'll take you away, Minnie, they'll take you away!" Pop's head was bowed in the bend of his arm on the table.

Under the heavy blow of good fortune Minnie Fogarty covered and Pop Dolan fumed within their once so peaceful castle on the crowded river bank.

By ten o'clock all the gas house section had assembled at the outer walls and in the mob were many who were wondering and scheming to "get a cut" of the huge sum, a half million dollars, that had been won by lottery luck into the lap of the young orphan.

"Flatfoot" Cassidy appealed for help and the reserves were sent from the station house, but the reporters and cameramen had police cards admitting them within the lines and nothing could be done about that. There was constant pounding on the stout little gate in the high brick wall and loud calls for Pop Dolan. Rocks carrying messages were hurled over the dingy white coping; one of these inadvertently crashed through Pop's window, missing his hoary head by an inch or two and all but upsetting the big kerosene lamp. It was more than even a philosopher could stand.

Minnie got his lantern and the two made their way to the second

Get Riot Call. "Many wounded." And there was some basis for all this wild alarm because, during the excitement created by Pop's attack with the hose, a gun battle was fought between two rival beer running gangs in the neighborhood. There was actual shooting, and plenty of it, two blocks from the brewery, causing the cops to rearrange in the direction of combat and fire their pistols at escaping automobiles.

Pop braced the nozzle in the window so that the water would keep falling over the wall just above his gate and then led a retreat to his lair, Minnie and Terry following. "Say your prayers and get to bed, Min," he ordered. "Terry and I will hold the fort."

"Yes sir."

"If those hoaxes outside would put all that time and energy in trying to do something useful they might get a chance at happiness. But that wouldn't be the New York way. They've only one dream, gettin' somethin' for nothin'. The best of them would rather pick up a torn ten dollar bill in the gutter than earn a hundred dollars."

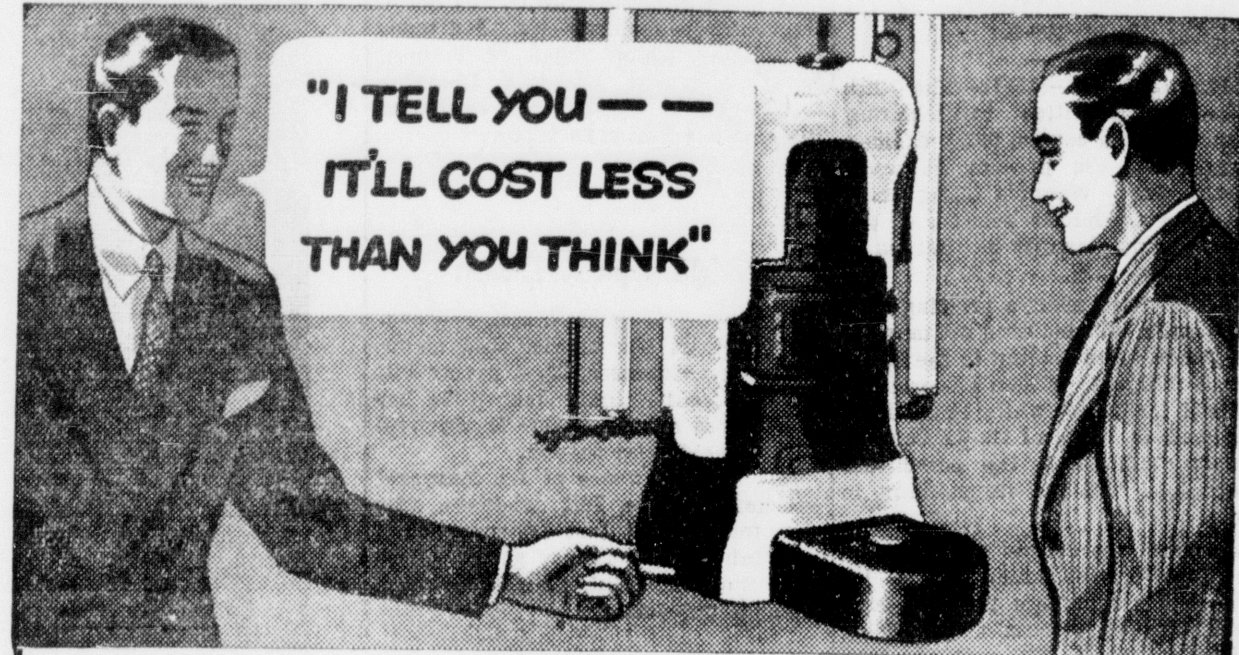

She put out a glass of milk and his two midnight sandwiches, tucked a pillow in his easy chair, cleaned out his pipe, put the matches handy and held up her cheek to be kissed.

"Good night, Pop," she said. "Don't worry about the money. We haven't got it yet. I mean if it was here, a trunkful of it, we wouldn't be able to sleep for fear thieves would blow up the place."

"Yes, You're a good girl and have sense. Just pray that nothing's going to break up our little household—you and me and Terry."

WHY IT PAYS TO READ THE ADVERTISEMENTS IN THE BRISTOL COURIER

First, because it is lower Bucks County's only daily newspaper.

Second, because Bristol is Bucks County's biggest market.

Third, because the makers and merchants who advertise in the Courier stake their reputations, in cold black type, that what you read is true. That is why each article they sell you must be so thoroughly satisfactory that you would later answer "yes" to this, the most important question a merchant can ask a customer: "Would you buy it again?"

Fourth, because the Courier daily goes into 3500 homes in this section, where it is read and re-read for its advertisements and news.

... AND TO THE ADVERTISER ...

The Courier offers a concentrated coverage of lower Bucks County. The Courier boasts a substantial increase in circulation. The Courier is relied upon in the homes of Bristol and vicinity for its news and shopping guidance. A small advertisement at little cost will bring big results.

purchases. We are unable to meet the demand for houses sought around Bristol and vicinity. There is also a shortage of apartments. We find those buying and renting are able to make bigger down-payments, and to pay the higher rents demanded.

Charles LaPolla informs that he has on his list only two apartments for rent in the borough, and but three houses for rent. There are on his list, however, a number of properties to be sold. From the first of April until now houses have been selling better, with business practically 100 per cent better than one year ago. But most of the families seek to rent houses," he added.

Francis J. Byers, another Bristol agent for real estate, tells that there was "quite an improvement" in movement of real estate during the last several months. "There is practically nothing for rent, either houses or apartments, in and around Bristol," he added. "We have a long waiting list, people who desire to rent."

From John Hardy comes the word that a shortage is also noted in houses and apartments for rent. "Sales have been going well, but houses are not selling as fast as they are renting," he informs. "Rentals have been more brisk during the past six months particularly, with no vacancies now to speak of." Mr. Hardy also claims that payments by those buying and renting seem to be more easily made by the buyer and renter.

THIS WEEK—150 YEARS AGO

The Story of the Constitutional Convention of 1787

BY RAYMOND PITCAIRN

THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE

"In free governments the rulers are the servants, and the people their superiors and sovereigns."

With these words Benjamin Franklin struck a keynote of the new American government just a century and a half ago this week, during a brief address to members of the Federal Convention that drafted our Constitution at Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

The wise and venerable Poor Richard made his statement during a discussion on the proposed National Executive. Into the debate had entered various suggestions on the Executive term of office, including one that it continue for life, and another that the President be ineligible for re-election. Franklin disapproved such proposals.

In characteristic vein the ever-original dean of the Convention observed that some delegates seemed to imagine "that the returning to the mass of the people was degrading the Magistrate." But, he pointed out, since the people were the masters, and the Chief Magistrates their servants, such return to their ranks "was not to degrade, but to promote them."

"And," continued Franklin, "it would be imposing an unreasonable burden on them (the Chief Magistrates) to keep them always in a state of servitude, and not allow them to become again one of the masters."

After further discussion the Convention adopted a resolution providing "that a National Executive be instituted, to consist of a single person to be chosen by the National Legislature for the term of seven years."

It provided further that he should be ineligible for a second term, should have power to execute the national laws, and should receive a fixed compensation out of the national treasury.

As with various other resolutions approved during the early weeks of the Convention, certain of these provisions were later changed.

Many of the significant changes in the resolutions were made by a small group of prominent delegates, appointed as a "Committee of Detail" to prepare and report a draft of the Constitution.

Then, with the first part of their labors ended, members of the Convention, on July 26, submitted the twenty-three resolutions it had adopted to that committee, and adjourned until August 6 to await its report.

They had put their work into capable hands. As Chairman of the Committee, George Washington appointed John Rutledge of South Carolina, noted lawyer and later a Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Other members were Edmund Randolph, of Virginia, who became our first Attorney-General; Nathaniel Gorham, of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole; Oliver Ellsworth, of Connecticut, later Chief Justice of the United States; and James Wilson, of Pennsylvania, who also was to become a famous member of that high tribunal.

While the Committee labored, other delegates enjoyed the first long recess of the Convention. How the majority spent it, history does not record. But of the activities of the Presiding Officer, George Washington, we know.

During that week he took the opportunity to visit again a scene where, with thousands of other patriots, he had made history—the now famous encampment at Valley Forge.

In his own journal recording a trip there with Gouverneur Morris appears a notation, under the date of July 31, 1787, telling how the former Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army had ridden over the entire cantonment and visited the old works and encampments, by that time in neglected ruins.

From the historic field he returned to Philadelphia and the Convention then laboring to make permanent the freedom which the sacrifices of that army and that encampment had done so much to win.

Next Week: "We, the People."
